

New York Times Current and Historical

The New York Times Current and Historical databases are available through ProQuest. You can search for topics of interest by typing in keywords. The NYT also contains a database of its book reviews that would be helpful for determining the value of a book you might be using in your research.

Searching

ProQuest uses a number of search rules that are important to understand even when running a simple search.

- Use quotation marks to search for specific phrases (“melting Arctic ice”)
- Two word queries (e.g. global warming) are interpreted as phrases unless separated by a Boolean operator like AND or OR
- Three word searches (climate “Al Gore” Hollywood) are searched as words which need to be in proximity of each other.

The screenshot shows the ProQuest search interface. At the top, there are tabs for 'Basic', 'Advanced', 'Publications', and 'My Research'. Below the tabs, it says 'Databases selected: ProQuest Historical Newspapers The New York Times (1851 - 2005)'. The 'Basic Search' section is active, showing a search bar with 'Search' and 'Clear' buttons. Below the search bar, there is a dropdown menu for 'Database' set to 'News - The Historical New York Times'. To the right of the dropdown is a link 'Select multiple databases'. Below the database selection, there are three radio button options for 'Date range': 'On this date:', 'Before this date:', and 'From:'. Each option has a corresponding date input field with a placeholder 'mm/dd/yyyy'. To the right of these options is the text 'Limit search by date.'. At the bottom of the date range section, there is a link 'More Search Options' circled in red, followed by the text 'Expand for more search limiters.'.

Type in your search phrase to the Basic search or you can click on the Advanced tab to create a more complex search.

Search Results

The NYT Historical database will take you to a results screen where each of the articles will be available to you in full text.
